Around 1777, the Shawnee war chief Blue Jacket built a settlement here, known as "Blue Jacket's Town". Bellefontaine was platted by European Americans in 1820 and incorporated by the legislature in 1835. In 1837, the Mad River & Lake Erie Railroad built the first railroad to Bellefontaine. This began its reputation as a railroading town. In the 1890s the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis Railroad (also called the Big Four Railroad) built a main terminal in the city. This terminal boasted the largest roundhouse between New York and St. Louis. Though railroading hit hard times and the industry went through radical restructuring in the late 20th century, and the Big Four terminal ceased operations in 1983, Bellefontaine remains a landmark on America's railways. The city is now just a thoroughfare for CSX.

Downtown BELLEFONTAINE

In 1891, Bellefontaine became the location of the first concrete street in America. George Bartholomew invented a process for paving using Portland cement, which until then had been used in stone construction. A small section of Main street, on the west side of the Logan County Courthouse, was the first to be paved using that process. When that proved successful, Court Avenue, which runs along the south side of the courthouse, was paved with concrete. While Main Street is now paved with asphalt, Court Avenue has retained its original concrete pavement for more than 100 years. At its centennial, the street was closed to traffic and a statue of Bartholomew placed at its Main Street end. Today, Bellefontaine has a population of over 13,000 people and is growing. Over 25 million dollars has been invested in Downtown Bellefontaine, renovating 27 buildings and attracting over 30 businesses. Not only is Downtown Bellefontaine thriving in ways that are indescribable, but the County has plenty of attractions to check out and enjoy. Ohio's largest ski resort, Mad River Mountain is a short 10-minute drive away in Zanesfield, offering plenty of winter fun for the whole family, while Indian Lake is a short 15-minute drive away, offering plenty of summer fun for everyone. You may find yourself enjoying our county so much that you just might stay.
